Gratitude

Living the paschal mystery means that we embrace lives of self-giving, not to receive thanks from others for the good we do them, but to express tangibly in our lives that we give what we have first been given by God. Gratitude is an expression of how at home we are with God and others. Expressions of gratitude can take many forms- saying thanks for a gift received yes, but more. A justly deserved and wholehearted compliment is a way of saying thanks. Pitching in and helping when we see someone tired is a way of saying thanks. Taking the time to go for a leisurely walk with a friend and listening to him or her talk about what's going on in life is a way of saying thanks. Gratitude has many faces; it best expresses itself as being at home with self and other. And especially our being at home with God. For this we always and everywhere give thanks.

"O my God, let me remember with gratitude and confess to thee thy mercies toward me."

— St. Augustine of Hippo
